Supply chain trends to look out for in 2021

The shock of the pandemic on businesses and supply chains across the world in 2020 was huge and the reverberations will continue into 2021 and beyond. The pandemic has highlighted the critical importance of robust and secure supply chains and of sound and effective procurement. This applies to both the public and private sectors.

An article published recently by Achilles, the supply chain and information management specialists, briefly examines the top supply trends to watch out for in 2021. It is useful for bidders in either the public or private sectors to recognise the importance of:

- Building resilience within your business and understanding the risks the business is exposed to.
- Being more prepared and analysing the data that impacts on your business.
- Moving towards more sustainable processes and reducing your business' carbon footprint.
- Having effective cyber security and secure information management systems.

Whatever size of contract you might be bidding for, irrespective of the sector, these trends are becoming increasingly important areas that suppliers will want to develop as part of any successful tender submission.
